The Use of Volunteers in State Agencies on Aging and Disabilities

Long-Term Care Ombudsman Program
Background

Engaging Volunteers in the Aging Network: A National Resource Center is a project funded by an Administration on Aging (AoA) grant to the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging (n4a). This three-year project is designed to enhance the engagement of volunteers in the Aging Network, with an emphasis on increasing volunteer participation of the Baby Boom generation. In addition to AoA and n4a, the project partners include: the National Association of States United for Aging and Disabilities (NASUAD); the AARP Foundation; Senior Service America, Inc. (SSAI); the University of Michigan; and The Council on Certification for Volunteer Administration (CCVA). The National Council on Aging (NCOA) and the Corporation for National and Community Service (CNCS) are also working on the project in a collaborative role.

The primary goal of the project is to develop a national volunteer resource center to provide technical assistance for organizations and agencies to establish AoA and the National Aging Network as leaders in civic engagement. An additional aim of the project is to facilitate enlistment of Baby Boomers in civic engagement to fill a service gap created by budget constraints and a growing number of older adults who seek assistance from the Aging Network.

Given the recent economic downturn, states are looking for ways to cut spending, while maintaining as many services as possible. Enlistment of volunteers, especially Boomers, in the delivery of Aging Network services represents an opportunity for states to continue serving older adults despite the declining budget, as the population of older adults steadily grows. Through assessment, collaboration and coordination of resources, project partners aim to develop a national resource center that will assist state and local organizations in utilizing volunteers to overcome economic barriers.

1 The large cohort of people that make up the Baby Boom generation, or “Baby Boomers,” are currently ages 47-65, nearing or recently beginning retirement. The population of Baby Boomers is viewed by project partners as an important target for volunteer recruitment due to their numbers, professional skills and possible free time to devote to volunteerism.
In order to establish a baseline for the level of civic engagement in the Aging Network, NASUAD and n4a conducted both quantitative and qualitative assessments of current state and local programs, which rely on a volunteer workforce. The assessments drew information on volunteer program details such as funding sources; volunteer demographics and participation numbers; program management; screening; training; and the value programs place on their volunteer programs. The assessment results will help inform the partners on areas of focus throughout the development of a national resource center.

Methodology

The NASUAD assessment was performed in two parts: an online scan, and three follow-up conference calls with program directors. The online scan was sent to 204 state-level directors of four programs on March 2, 2011: 1) 51 directors of State Health Insurance Programs (SHIP); 2) 51 directors of Senior Medicare Patrol programs (SMP); 3) 51 directors of State Long Term Care (LTC) Ombudsman programs; and 4) 51 directors of Aging and Disability Resource Centers (ADRC). In the first phase of the assessment, NASUAD’s online scan was comprised of both ‘core questions’ (questions included both in NASUAD and n4a scans), and supplemental questions including in-depth state program-specific questions about current volunteer program details and techniques for recruitment and retention. The purpose of the assessment was to establish a baseline for the level of civic engagement in the programs reviewed, and to gain a broader understanding of how programs recruit, retain, coordinate, and utilize their volunteer base.

The State Long Term Care (LTC) Ombudsman program serves as an advocate and resource for older adults who reside in long-term care facilities such as nursing homes, assisted living and board and care homes. The Long Term Care Ombudsman volunteers, known as “Ombudsmen,” help residents and their families understand and exercise their rights to quality of care and quality of life. The Ombudsman program advocates for residents at both the individual and systems levels by receiving, investigating and resolving complaints made by or on behalf of residents.

2 See Appendix 2 for full NASUAD online scan
The program also promotes the development of resident and family councils, and informs governmental agencies, providers and the general public about issues and concerns impacting residents of long-term care facilities.

The NASUAD assessment aimed to capture only state-level programs, however many states also have similar volunteer programs at the local level which are generally administered by Area Agencies on Aging (AAAs). Details regarding local volunteer programs were captured through n4a’s assessment of the AAAs. Eight states and the District of Columbia do not have Area Agencies on Aging: Alaska, Delaware, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Wyoming. For these states and the District of Columbia, the State Agencies on Aging and Disability function as both the state and local agency, and details regarding their volunteer programs are captured in a separate NASUAD assessment of State Agencies on Aging and Disability.

The second phase of the assessment was a series of three program-specific conference calls held with the state directors of the SHIP, SMP, and state LTC Ombudsman programs. The Ombudsman call was one hour in length and was held on April 4, 2011. Approximately 13 Ombudsman directors, one representative from the Administration on Aging, one representative from the Ombudsman Resource Center and three NASUAD staff members participated in the call. During the call, NASUAD presented program-specific findings from the online scan, and asked the Ombudsman directors follow-up questions to gain a more in-depth understanding of the individual program data collected in the online scan. NASUAD also elicited suggestions for the new national volunteer resource center.

Key Findings

Ombudsman responses in the scan differed from the overall responses in several ways. Ombudsman programs were the oldest: 65 percent of volunteer Ombudsman programs are over 10 years old, compared to 45 percent overall and Ombudsman programs also have the highest rate of Boomer volunteers. They have the lowest number of volunteer coordinators, both state and local. Statewide, 28 percent of Ombudsman directors reported having a volunteer coordinator, compared to 38 percent overall. Locally, 32 percent of Ombudsman directors reported having a volunteer coordinator, compared to 45 percent overall. Directors report higher perception of benefits provided to their programs by Ombudsman volunteers when asked if volunteers help fulfill the mission of the program, allow them to offer more services, and increase visibility of the program within the community.

The conference call with Ombudsman directors elicited important information on Ombudsman programs and how they can be strengthened. In discussing recruitment, several directors noted that the best advertisements were articles on real-world volunteerism stories. One director said she has a monthly column in a local newspaper to discuss Ombudsman issues and to encourage people to become volunteers. Another director noted that current volunteers are the best recruiters, because they are extremely effective at educating others about the program through word of mouth.

The benefits and challenges associated with Boomer volunteers were also discussed. Directors reported that, Boomer volunteers often possess more professional skills, have higher energy levels, and are more diplomatic, proactive, and assertive than other generations of volunteers. They often have a greater desire than older generations to be recognized and to learn from their volunteer experience. One director reported that Boomer volunteers often tend to be more interested in promoting social justice and human rights, traits that make them especially well-suited for working as Ombudsmen. Because of their wealth of professional knowledge and experience, many Boomer volunteers try to work outside the Ombudsman job description; for example, retired doctors may try to diagnose residents rather than focusing on the traditional work of an Ombudsman. For all of the above reasons, directors reported that the participation of Boomers in volunteer programs presented new set of benefits and challenges. One director commented that all Boomers could not be considered within one group, given the large degree of variation among this cohort.

Many Ombudsman directors reported that their programs are facing severe staffing issues. Only 28 percent of directors reported having a statewide volunteer coordinator, and 32 percent have a coordinator at the local level. Because of this shortage of coordinators, Ombudsman directors have expanded the volunteer job descriptions beyond the traditional Ombudsman role. One director said her program uses long-term Ombudsmen as trainers and mentors for new volunteers.
Another director reported having volunteers advocate with legislators for more funding and support.

Because of the demands of the Ombudsman program, all volunteers must participate in a rigorous training process before they can volunteer. This training is time-consuming and difficult for many Ombudsman programs to implement. Directors reported that online training would be a good resource for many possible volunteers, especially in rural areas, though it may also be most useful for Boomer volunteers who are generally more comfortable with computers and the internet than older generations. They reported that the development and implementation of online training could save both administrative and staff time and better prepare volunteers.

Ombudsman programs have their own resource center, the National Long-Term Care Ombudsman Resource Center. This center provides support to Ombudsman programs throughout the country. However, directors on the conference call had ideas for how the new national volunteer resource center could further assist their programs. Several Ombudsman directors suggested help with advertising from the national resource center including a national campaign for volunteering in the aging network, and/or a national campaign aimed at recruiting Boomers. This large-scale advertising effort would provide a cohesive national message, prevent duplication of effort throughout state and local organizations, and allow SHIPs to focus on other programmatic elements. Though the Ombudsman resource center provides information on best practices and other ideas within the Ombudsman program, one director suggested a library of best practices on a range of practices from different national volunteer programs would help broaden their range of ideas and perspectives. Another director discussed the use of databases for improving recruitment of volunteers. Though there are currently several different recruitment databases, the national resource center could compile a list of the most comprehensive state and national databases, allowing Ombudsman programs to recruit more successfully by accessing a broader base of volunteers.

Conclusions

Ombudsman programs have faced serious budgetary and staffing issues related to the recent economic downturn. It has affected their volunteer base, because many possible volunteers are unable to retire as early as they would have otherwise and other volunteers are still searching for employment, their clients who are facing more financial hardship, as well as the programs themselves that are facing budget and staffing cuts, despite increasing demand. The strength of the Ombudsman program is its base of trained, dedicated volunteers who use their training to help protect those in need. Ombudsman programs are well-supported by the National Long-Term Care Ombudsman Resource Center, however directors identified ways in which the program could be further supported by a new national volunteer resource center. Some of their suggestions included a national volunteer advertising campaign, a library of best practices, assistance with recruitment, a broadened scope of information on national volunteer databases, and help with online training.
